SOCIETY MEN OF LONDON.

A Leading English Paper Accuses Them of Being Lazy and Selfish.

A careful and, so far as we have been able to compass it, an impartial study of the young man of the present day has convinced many persons that he is abnormally lazy, and that his selfishness is without parallel in any other period of our history. A concurrence of the two vices is to be traced, they think, to the fact that he has almost ceased, or at any rate he is rapidly ceasing, to dance. It is in vain that he will plead the absorbing occupations of modern life, or the saddening influence of the philosophy of Schopenhauer. The plea is idle.

It is not the overwrought student or the pale pessimist alone who declines nowadays to join in the mazy dance. It is the dashing, or once dashing, militaire. The singular boast which was once the monopoly of the Tenth hussars will soon be the common property of every cavalry and infantry regiment of her majesty's army, while as for the learned professions, their members make fresh contributions to the row of "wall flowers" every season.

Yet there seems to be no ground for saying that girls are any less fond of dancing than they used to be; the partner difficulty is created by the male sex alone. In other words, the young man of the present day, having ceased to care about this particular amusement himself, is in the majority of cases too indolent and too selfish to take part in it for the sake of gratifying other persons of that sex which it is supposed to be man's duty, no less than his delight, to attempt to please. Such self sacrifice, however, finds no votary in the fin de siecle youth. To use his own expressive phrase, it is "not good enough, don't you know," and he declines it accordingly.

The "wretch concentrated all on self" looks on at a few dances, and surveys the rows of forlorn and unasked maidens who line the sides of the ballroom and leaves early for a cigarette and a lemon squash at his club. We are prepared, of course, for the answer which our young man of the period, thus "roughly but righteously handled," is likely to make to us. He will say that this is word for word—except as to the cigarette and lemon squash—identical with what his grandfather once listened to from his great grandfather and repeated some thirty years after to his father.

There is a speciousness about this argument which might, perhaps, deceive the unthinking, and it is therefore well to remind them of the well established fact that the grandfather of the youth of the present day, although worthy people in many ways, were extremely prejudiced, whereas their sons, the fathers and uncles of our contemporary young men, are admittedly capable of instituting a fair and impartial comparison between the men and manners of the present and the past.

Instead of resorting to plausible but fallacious retorts of the ad hominem description we counsel our youths to resolve to cultivate the virtues of courtesy, kindliness and self sacrifice to others, to determine that they will display in future a chivalrous attention to ladies and register a vow that elders of their own sex shall never fail to receive from them the due tribute of deference and respect.—London Telegraph.

The Hurrying Instinct.

The American trait of hurrying from instinct was illustrated on the bridge the other day. A man with a big valise in one hand and leading two little girls by the other, while a tired looking woman with a baby in her arms and a bandbox perched on the baby followed, furnished the illustration. The party was just starting up the stairs on the Brooklyn side. The man turned and said, "There, Maria, we have forty-five minutes to get to Cortlandt street, so we needn't hurry," and then as he heard the bell clang at the head of the stairs he was on his way up, two steps at a time, with the valise and the two little girls bumping together as they trailed out behind him, and the poor woman with the baby and the bandbox making frantic efforts to keep in sight.

He missed the train, as he deserved, and while he was waiting for the next, which followed in one minute and a half, he remembered that there was no need of being in a hurry, and asked "Maria" why she did not remind him of that fact instead of letting him race up the stairs at the risk of dropping dead from heart disease.—New York Times.

Progressive Conversation (Limited).

The first conversazione of the season was given at the Normal school by the girls of the senior class. The programme concluded with a promenade, when the young men made engagements with the young ladies to talk about the weather, art, physical culture and other subjects for the rest of the evening. Five minutes was the time allowed for conversation with one young lady, and forty minutes to fulfill all engagements made during the promenade. The conversationalists were notified when their time had expired by the tapping of Professor Prettyman's bell.—Baltimore Sun.

Easily Satisfied.

"It's money, money, money all the time!" growled Mr. Myser. "Nothing but money,"

"I'm glad to hear that," returned Mrs. M., meekly. "I'd begun to think it was money at no time. One hundred dollars will do me this morning."—Harper's Bazar.

THE LOST WAIF.

The Strange Midnight Experience of an Express Messenger.

The night express went thundering out of Hopkinsville, Ky., at 7 o'clock sharp. The passengers had made themselves comfortable, and everything seemed auspicious for a quick and safe run to Nashville, Tenn. The express messenger busied himself about his packages, getting his car in order, after which, having nothing else to do, he sauntered to the open window and looked out at the rising moon. What a glorious night it was! The full moon came up from behind the trees and hung over their tops like a ball of fire. How sweet and peaceful everything looked. The thoughts of the young man went back to home and mother. Wrapped in a delightful dream he sank down on the box nearest to him, but suddenly he jumped up in alarm, for he had heard a remarkable sound—a poor, faint little voice crying, "Papa."

"Oh, what a cruel trick for the boys to play on him." He must find the little one at once. He searched every nook and corner and looked behind every box, but no baby was to be found.

What was he to do? He felt certain that he had heard the voice, and something must be done. Ah, he had it at last. He rung the bell with all his might, and the conductor came hurriedly to know what had happened.

The passengers were all excitement; windows went up, heads were poked out, and every one had a surmise, fully one half of them thinking it must be robbers.

When the conductor returned he told them that the express messenger had heard the cry of a child in his car and then he inquired if any child were missing. This threw all the mothers present into a panic of fright. But they soon recovered when they saw that all their own darlings were safe, and every woman expressed the greatest sympathy for the little stranger in the express car. They even volunteered to go and assist in the search for the little lost waif, but to this the conductor would not consent.

The young man in the express car was meanwhile doubting the evidence of his own senses, for had he not heard the voice? He could swear to it. Slowly he sinks down on the same box, when, merciful heavens! there was the voice again crying "Mamma."

Ah, he has it now. The voice comes from the box. Some heartless mother, perhaps, sending her baby by express.

Quickly he cuts the cord and takes off the pasteboard lid. Yes, there it lies, the dear little soul, with its soft curls and snowy dress. He lifts it out tenderly, and then, imagine his surprise—it is a doll—one of Edison's speaking dolls. Every time he sat down on the box he pressed the spring, and then came the feeble little wail of "papa," "mamma," which had caused so much sympathy and alarm.—Detroit Free Press.

Bones in Terrapin.

A young girl from St. Louis in a recent visit to this city was introduced for the first time to the peculiar charms of terrapin. Not long after her first experiments she sat in the crowded supper room of a private house, into which the guests were pouring from the ballroom. "No, I believe I won't have any terrapin," as the waiter held it down before her. "What, not eat terrapin?" asked her escort. "Is it possible that you don't like terrapin?"

"Oh, yes, I like it well enough," she answered indifferently, but in a voice so loud that it sounded over all the clink of glass and silver and hum of voices. "Yes, I like the taste of it well enough, but I don't like to eat it. It's so full of little bones I always feel as if I were eating boiled kittens." Instantly the clink of forks upon plates was audibly lessened, and the next day the caterer said to his chef, "What in the world was the matter with that terrapin up at the M——'s last night?"—New York Evening Sun.

He Had to Be Natural.

An Irish officer of distinction attended a ball, but was not so proficient in dancing as in the use of his sword. While standing up in a cotillon his partner called his attention to a young man opposite, who had previously exhibited much skill as a dancer, in the act of mimicking the movements of the officer. A little observation convinced him that it was the intention of the young gallant to ridicule him, and, therefore, stepping up toward him, he inquired:

"Is that your natural way of dancing?"

He was answered that it was.

"Well," said the officer, "if so, by gracious, if I catch yer dancing artificially hereafter I'll knock yer down?"

The consequence was that the young fellow had to persist in mimicking while he remained in the room.—London Tit-Bits.

The Wonderful "Changeable Flower."

During the summer of 1890 the botanists made a wonderful discovery in Tehuantepec, having established the fact beyond a doubt that the native "hinta" has a flower that changes its color three or more times each day when the weather is favorable. In the morning it is white; at noon it has changed to a deep red; at night it is blue. It is even claimed that some individual trees of this species have a flower that changes to many intermediate hues during the night. There are only two hours out of the twenty-four—from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m.—that this rarity gives out a perfume.—St. Louis Republic.

A LIVING SPECTACLE.

A Magnificent Display of Wild Horse Flesh Near the Platte River.

"One of the grandest sights I ever witnessed was a troop of wild horses on the prairie near the forks of the Platte river," said Charles A. McDonald, an old western pioneer and horse trader, when discussing the magnificent scenery of the west at the Grand Pacific. "It was a spectacle that made my nerves tingle, and I would give a great deal to see once more such a magnificent display of horseflesh. There were about two hundred animals in the drove, and the sun had just come up over the plains when I suddenly came out in front of them from a little grove where I had camped during the night. I was on the back of my own mustang. He lifted his head high into the air, began to paw the earth with his forefeet and commenced to snort in a most aristocratic manner. It was then that I saw the grand sight.

Every animal lifted his head on hearing the cry of welcome or joy from my steed, and looking my way formed in a circle and stood still. One magnificent black stallion, who appeared to be the leader of the troop, after looking at me for a moment came toward me with an easy, graceful stride from the opposite side, and took up a position in front of his followers. He was the finest specimen of a horse I ever saw. His tail swept the ground, and his mane hung to his shoulders. His body shone like a looking glass in the morning sunlight. He looked as if he had just received most flattering attention from an experienced groom. Some of the animals appeared neglected, but the majority was sleek looking.

"My own animal became so excited at the sight that I made haste to tie him to a tree. Soon after I jumped from my horse's back the black stallion gave his head a toss and started on a rapid trot across the prairie, the entire band following him in single file. After going about half a mile away the band returned, the magnificent black still in the lead. They came within 100 yards of me, and the leader whinnied as if to invite my horse to come and join them.

"My poor Jack! I felt so sorry for him. He stood looking at the wild rovers, his lariat drawn taut, and at the call from the leader made the most frantic efforts to join the wild band, and thus forever put an end to his drudgery. Sweat came from every pore, he was so excited, and his body was covered with foam, as if he had just finished a thirty mile run. I was afraid he would succeed in breaking away, so I fired my rifle into the air to frighten the drove, and the leader took the hint and scampered off across the plain, followed by the others. I watched them until they were out of view, and actually I wished I were one of them, they looked so contented. I have since looked upon a magnificent collection of horses, but that sight was the grandest I ever witnessed."—Chicago Herald.

He Would Get Up and Howl.

John H. Upshur, an old tar, who has been in every branch of the United States navy, from cook to captain, "hove to," set down his trunk and "took observation" with his "weather eye" when asked what he should do in case of war between ourselves and Great Britain.

"The professor of our navigation class," he replied, "once asked a classmate, 'If you were in command of a big vessel and found yourself in a rough sea, with a huge rock on your beam, another astern and one on either quarter, what would you do to get your ship out of such a predicament?'

"'What would I do?' repeated the student in a brown study.

"'Yes, what would you do?'

"'I would get up and howl,' was the reply. And that is just what Uncle Sam's navy would have to do if it came into contact with a fleet from any powerful nation."—St. Louis Star Sayings.

It Could Not Have Surprised Them.

Landlady (deferentially)—Mr. Smith, do you suppose that the first steamboat created much surprise among the fish when it was first launched.

Smith (curiously)—I can't say, marm, whether it did or not.

"Oh, I thought from the way you eyed the fish before you that you might acquire some information on that point."

Smith (the malicious villain)—Very likely, marm—very likely; but it's my opinion, marm, that this fish left its native element before steamboats were invented.—London Tit-Bits.

Should Have Waited.

Henry Williams gave a hack driver $2 to take him to the depot in Savannah in advance of the 'bus, and he got there just in time to be run over by a horse, smashed under a bill board, and trampled on by a drove of mules. When the 'bus came rolling up he was rolled off to an hospital.—Detroit Free Press.

Breaking Up Colds in Children.

When children have taken colds there is nothing better to give them than molasses, butter and vinegar. To half cup molasses take a tablespoonful of butter and two tablespoonfuls of vinegar; cook a few minutes, and give a little frequently. Quite young children can take this.—Herald of Health.

Not Even on New Year's.

"Bronson must have lived an uneventful life."

"Why do you think so?"

"He left me his diaries for ten years when he died, and he hadn't written a line in any of 'em."—Harper's Bazar.

FENCES OUGHT TO GO.

The following sensible article from Farm Life will be read with interest by the people of Sonoma and vicinity, who have experienced their share of fencing against their neighbor's stock. That paper says:

Down with the useless fences! This is a motto that all sensible farmers will adopt. Let him take the time and figure the amount of money invested in fencing on the farm and what it costs him to keep it in repair. He will be surprised. And then let him spend a few evenings in planning a better system of husbandry and reduce necessary fences to the minimum. Having formed definite plans, he can gradually rearrange his farm fences so that in the course of a few years his fields will be all of a better shape.

There is a strong natural antipathy to taxation; the way to make everything odious and to bring about change or reform is to show it up as a tax. Well that is what every rod of useless fence is—needless, burdensome tax.

Every single rod of useless fence, even on the most economical system of fencing, is a tax of 2 per cent, or over on each acre. To get rid of this oppressive tax, "down with the useless fences." Farm fencing should be reduced to the actual necessities of the most profitable system of agriculture.

The village fence is even worse than the farm fence, comparing costs and benefits. In communities that possess the highest type of civilization, front yard fences are being taken down to stay. And in some places both village and farm fences have been already abolished.

The principle on which most stock laws are made, that every man should be required to fence in his own stock instead of fencing out his neighbor's, is a sound one and will aid to put down useless fences.

THE Republicans and Democrats are doing most of the talking about next year; but the Farmer's Alliance is adding to its membership at a rate that speaks for itself, and in no uncertain tone.

Not a Sign Bearer.

We observe in one of our esteemed contemporaries that a lady in Santa Barbara, a few days ago, made a sensible remonstrance and on justifiable grounds. She went into a retail store and made a purchase and wished to take the goods along with her in her hand. The merchant was about to wrap up the goods in one of those brown paper sheets on which the merchant's name and business was printed in large letters. Of course the big lettering was about to be folded so as to show on the outside of the package. The lady asked the merchant to please fold the letters inside. She said she read the newspapers and as the merchant advertised in the papers she knew what he had to sell; the printing on the wrapper had no news for her. And she said that she did not care to carry a sign along the street that made people stare at her, and it not only made her an advertiser—a sign bearer—for the merchant, but also told that she had been purchasing. The merchant remarked that he had never before thought of the matter in that light and that the lady was right. Hereafter he would buy his wrapping paper in an unprinted condition. It was cheaper to buy it unprinted, although the printing was very cheaply done. And printing did no good as an advertisement unless customers would consent to carry it along the street in a manner that would allow the printing to be read, and it was scarcely fair to ask customers to take upon themselves tha kind of a burden. The Santa Barbara lady is the first to have on record these sentiments, but many others have felt as she did about the matter.—Grass Valley Telegraph.

THE death of the distinguished German soldier Field Marshal von Moltke, was a heavy blow to the ambitious young Emperor of Germany. He was in his ninety-first year and in case of war would not have been able to have taken an active part, but the loss of the advice of the man who had proven himself to be the foremost European soldier of modern times is nevertheless no slight one.

Through the Weary Hours

Of many a night, made doubly long by its protracted agony, the rheumatic sufferer tosses to and fro on his sleepless couch, vainly praying for that rest which only comes by fits and starts. His malady is one which ordinary medicines too often fail to relieve, but there is ample evidence to prove that the efficient blood depurent, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, afford the rheumatic a reliable means of relief. Check the malady in its incipient stages, when the first premonitory twinges come on, with this agreeable medicine, and avoid years of torture. Whatever be the rationale of the active influence of the bitters upon this malady, certain it is that no evidence relating to its effect is more direct and positive than that which relates to its action in cases of rheumatism. Like all sterling remedies, however, it deserves a protracted, systematic trial, and should not be abandoned because not at once remedial. It is equally efficacious in dyspepsia, indigestion and kindred diseases.

BOYES VS. MAXWELL.

Decision of Judge Dougherty in Favor of Plaintiff Prevails.

Defendant Compromises After Taking an Appeal to the Supreme Court.

The civil suit of Boyes vs. Geo. H. Maxwell, commenced before Judge Dougherty in the Superior Court of this county in February, 1889, has at last been settled to the satisfaction of plaintiff, who has been given a release of all his property by Maxwell and the many land and water companies on paper which he represented as business manager.

The suit was the outcome of the advent of the Boom in this valley in 1888. At that time a number of greedy speculators invaded the valley, and sought to secure control of all the valuable farms in sight by the bonding process—that is to say, for the payment of a small sum of money down an option would be obtained to purchase the same for a given sum as against the whole world.

The speculators, most of them strangers to our farmers, formed some half dozen land and water companies and secured options on many valuable properties in the vicinity of Sonoma. They might have reaped a rich reward for their thrift and industry, as they had a very soft snap of it, but they got to fighting among themselves over the spoils in prospective and the Boom, which was going to enrich everybody in this section, suddenly collapsed and caused the chins of many in this valley to fall clean down to their waistbands. Ever since the collapse there has been suits and counter suits going on between the whilom boomers, the rivals for the most part being represented by the Bacons on the one side and Geo. Maxwell on the other.

The farm of Capt. Boyes was one of the many that was bonded to the speculators. It is a valuable piece of property, and as there was no limit for the bond to expire he commenced suit, as above stated, to secure his rights. Judge Dougherty who tried the case rendered a decision in favor of Capt. Boyes. Defendant Maxwell then appealed to the Supreme Court in October, 1890. The appeal, however, was withdrawn last month by defendant Maxwell, and the case compromised out of court. By the settlement Capt. Boyes gets all that the decision of Judge Dougherty entitles him to, which was all he expected. This suit has been watched with considerable interest in this valley, as there are numerous other properties similarly involved. In the settlement of the suit Capt. Boyes has a release of the bond to his property signed by at least a dozen persons who were interested with Maxwell in the various companies which he formed in this valley.

May Weather in Sonoma Valley.

Robt. Hall, local Signal Service Observer, sent the following report to the chief officer of that bureau last Thursday: "Sixty one-hundredth inches of rain fell in gentle showers in Sonoma Valley last Tuesday night, making a total of 21.24 for the season. These refreshing showers will enable the horticulturist to cultivate orchard and vineyard until late in the season. These May rains are beneficial to late sown grain, hay and young trees planted this season. They will improve our pastures and increase the tonnage of grapes and the yield of deciduous fruit. To estimate the millions of dollars of increased wealth to the State would be impossible, but every mother's son is happy in the belief that he'll have money to loan after harvest.

Excursion.

It is proposed in the near future to get up an excursion to Hooker's Falls, to which all the "No Sweats," or members of the Anti-Perspiration Society, should not be invited for obvious reasons. The President of the Bald-Headed Club and ye pedagogue, accompanied by the former's man Friday as guide, visited that famous locality last Sunday and reported a first-class sweat. Due notice of the excursion will be given in the columns of the INDEX-TRIBUNE, and all persons, not to exceed 125 in number, desiring to accompany same, (Never-Sweats barred,) will leaves their names with Hog & Hominy, forninst the Plaza.

Memorial Services.

The memorial services held in honor of the late lamented J. B. Badger at Cambridge Hall, San Francisco, Sunday, April 26th, were most impressive. The interior was beautifully decorated with lovely white flowers with streamers of black and white suspended throughout the fine hall. A large number of relatives and friends of the deceased listened with marked attention to the long and impressive sermon delivered by a divine of the Episcopal Church.

THE CITY TRUSTEES.

The President's New Gavel—A Quiet Meeting—The "Index-Tribune" Scribe Becomes Unnecessarily Alarmed.

The meeting of City Trustees last Wednesday evening was almost devoid of interest. The three principal features of the session was a depleted treasury, the absence of the member from Broadway and the new gavel of President Poppe, which he used for the first time in calling the meeting to order, and which no doubt will have a tendency to keep obstreperous members within proper parliamentary bounds. The gavel in question is made of heavy oak and is almost as large as a back-woodman's maul, and, as a weapon of defense, it is a dandy.

The meeting was called to order at 7:30 o'clock and when the President brought his gavel down upon the table it fairly made the building tremble and caused the INDEX-TRIBUNE man to start up as though some one had said "Let's take something."

After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting, which were approved, Trustee Weyl of the Fire and Water Committee reported that he had caused to be erected a new hydrant for use of the firemen near the City Pavilion as ordered by the Board at a previous meeting.

Trustee Weyl also reported that objections had been made by contiguous property owners to having graves dug within fifteen feet of the fence on the south dividing line of Mountain Cemetery. The matter was referred to the Cemetery Committee.

A communication was received from Fred. T. Dubring requesting that he be given the proper line of his property on the corner of Napa and First-street East, as he intended to immediately commence the erection of a brick building. Referred to the Street Committee.

The bill of Clerk Breitenbach for three months salary was laid over for want of funds to pay the same.

The following bills were allowed and ordered paid: J. B. Small, $3.85; L. Bulotti, $25.50; G. W. Sparks, services, $34 50.

The Board then adjourned.

Party on the Napa Road.

A party was given at the residence of L. M. Johannsen, May 1st, in honor of his son H. E. Johannsen, who was married to Miss Lizzie Heinrich of Napa on the 26th of April, the young couple having just returned from their honeymoon. The dance hall was beautifully decorated with evergreens and various kinds of flowers. The grand march was led at nine o'clock by L. Johannsen and Miss Lottie Potter. Music was furnished by the Napa String Band. Dancing was kept up until 12 o'clock, when a bounteous supper was served, after which dancing was resumed until a late hour, when all took their departure for their respective homes. Among those present were:

Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Johannsen, Mr. and Mrs. G. Heinrich, Mr. and Mrs. C. Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Calder, Mr. and Mrs. Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Lyons, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. H. Sammons, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Pieratt, Mrs. Keyes and Mrs. P. Thompson.

RAMIE.

Its Culture in Sonoma Valley Attracting Attention in England.

Ever since the planting of Ramie in Sonoma Valley for experimental purposes was urged in these columns, several months ago, numerous inquires have been made in regard to the same by capitalists and manufacturers both in this county and Europe, who are anxious to purchase the product, which proves conciusively that if Ramie culture turns out a success in this valley that a ready and profitable market awaits the product. To give the reader an idea of the interest being taken abroad in Ramie culture in Sonom valley and to prove that there is a demand for Ramie fibre, we publish the following letter written to Capt. Boyes of this valley by Landauer & Co. of 36 Fenchurch street, London, bearing date of April 18th, 1891. We might here remark that the above firm is one of the most responsible in London:

Capt. H. E. Boyes, Agua Rica Farm, Sonoma Cal:

Dear Sir—We beg to take the liberty of addressing your good self, and no doubt you will be greatly surprised to receive a letter from us, but having read in the supplement of the Cordage Trade Journal a clipping from the SONOMA INDEX-TRIBUNE, giving an account of your introduction of the Ramie plant into your country, in which article we take a great interest, we made up our minds to write you with regard to the same.

Now our senior has already spent considerable sums of money in furtherance of the production of this article, and being interested in a factory for which we import China grass from China, we have a good outlet for Ramie, and providing we can depend upon regular supplies at a price that will permit of import, or if the quality is what it should be, we can do with any quantity. Therefore, you will readily understand that your venture is of great interest to us, and we shall be glad to hear from you at your leisure, if it turns out a success, with samples and offers, and we can then have the pleasure, if satisfactory, of doing business with you, besides our senior's report would be of service to you, as he is a world wide authority on this article.

Trusting soon to have the pleasure of receiving a letter from you we beg to remain

Yours Faithfully,
LANDAUER & Co.

Following is another letter of inquiry from Manchester, England, written by W. H. Armitage, a leading manufacturer of that city. He writes as follows under date of April 14th:

Capt. Boyes—Dear Sir:

I see from a newspaper cutting from the SONOMA INDEX TRIBUNE that you are interested in the cultivation of Ramie. I should esteem it a favor if you will send me particulars respecting the cultivation of the Ramie, the price of the machine for defibrizing the plant and any other information that might be useful to me.

There is a future for both this Ramie and the New Zealand flax, when the process of defibrizing is an accomplished fact.

I see that a machine has been patented and set up in Oakland. Should you be able to send me a drawing of the machine, or the name of the patentee, should be very much obliged.

Hoping you will be able to give me the information required and trusting that you will excuse my troubling you, I remain

Yours Truly,
W. H. ARMITAGE.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Shellville Public School held a very enjoyable May Day picnic at Maxwell's Grove. Eden Dale's large wagon with four of P. L. McGill's horses attached was used to carry the children to the grove. The wagon and horses were handsomely decorated with flags, evergreens and ribbons. Master Stevie Akers and Frankie McGill, seated on prettily decorated horses, acted as advance guards. Several carriages followed with the parents. Upon reaching the grounds a halt was made, and all alighted and soon their glad voices were heard in every part of the grove. Games, dancing and swinging commenced and were kept up until lunch was announced. Snowy white cloths were spread on the soft green grass upon which was placed almost every dainty that is generally taken to a picnic. After each one had eaten all they cared for dancing was again indulged in with good music furnished by the following: Miss Ida Goodman, guitar; Miss Manuel, guitar and Willie Manuel, violin. The bean bag game was played by many and several prizes were awarded. Miss Atterbury, the handsome young teacher, was crowned Queen of May during the afternoon amid great rejoicing. The day had well advanced before a start for home was made. The parents of these bright and interesting children must feel proud of the manner in which each conducted themselves on last May Day.

May Day at Agua Caliente.

Agua Caliente school children with their teacher Miss Guatier, their parents and friends, held a pleasant picnic on the pretty hills north of the Cady wine cellars, Friday of last week. The spot chosen was a most delightful one and the day being warm and pleasant a general good time was passed. The programme carried out on the grounds were highly interesting. Miss Elsie Appleton was Queen of May and as she sat surrounded by her maids of honor formed a beautiful picture. A number of recitations, songs and dialogues were rendered. The little Misses Johnson sang a beautiful duet, Miss Sadie Cady sang in French a pretty little song, one small girl sang a German song, while little Miss Gudalupi sang in Italian. All of the above was interspersed with dancing, music being furnished by a number of the scholars. A fine lunch was contributed by M. K. Cady, which was spread under the over-hanging boughs of the lovely trees that dot the hills around Agua Caliente. One of the features of the day was a May pole dance, which was executed with much grace by the little ones. Mrs. Boyes of Agua Rica was present and at the earnest request of all took some fine views of the May Pole, another of the Queen and her attendants. A number of strangers were present and all pronounced this picnic a most enjoyable one.

The World Enriched.

The facilities of the present day for the production of everything that will conduce to the material welfare and comfort of mankind are almost unlimited and when Syrup of Figs was first produced the world was enriched with the only perfect laxative known, as it is the only remedy which is truly pleasing and refreshing to the taste and prompt and effectual to cleanse the system gently in the Spring time or, in fact, at any time and the better it is known the more popular it becomes.

MATCHING NILE GREEN.

Why a Salesman at the Silk Counter Never Smiled Again.

Not long ago a young woman set out in quest of a certain difficult shade of Nile green satin. She carried a sample. An anxious look set itself in two stubborn little wrinkles between her mild blue eyes and marred to some extent the sweet repose of her countenance. She wandered up Broadway. In and out of all the big stores on both sides of the great thoroughfare she treaded her tedious way. She stood staunchly at all the silk counters and caused stacks and stacks of pieces of green satin to be brought down, unfolded and piled up into a very mountain of silk. But still the right shade didn't appear.

At last the polite salesman bethought him of a sample, and he asked her if she had one to match. She produced the fragment of well worn satin, and the salesman knew at a glance that it was an old, almost obsolete shade, and probably couldn't be matched in New York. He told her so. Well, couldn't he get it for her, she asked with a pretty little pout, as it was very important. A Broadway house was too busy to call a halt for the purpose of matching impossible samples.

But the woman was persevering. She tried Fourteenth street next, and exhausted every silk stock and the patience of many salesmen on that thoroughfare without finding what she wanted. None of the floor walkers in these establishments was "green" enough to promise to get the satin for her. There remained, however, Sixth avenue to come, and she went up town and down town, through every store, until she got up to Twenty-third street. Then, with fire in her eye, she sailed around the corner, and at last landed in a big bazar not a thousand miles from the Fifth Avenue hotel.

The purveyor of silks was most obliging. He brought down piece after piece of light green, dark green, olive green and every other sort of green except the shade she wanted, which stubbornly remained invisible. At last, in a moment of weakness, he took pity on the young damsel. He felt sorry for her. Besides, she hadn't eaten a morsel of lunch and looked as if she were about to cry. Anyway, she was well dressed and not bad looking, and he thought she might develop into a good customer if he took a little trouble to oblige her. So with his best smile, the one he kept for just such occasions, he took the sample and promised that if she would call two days later he would have the exact shade she wanted.

Well, that man actually made it his business to send down town and have a search made through half a dozen wholesale houses for that obsolete shade of Nile green satin, which materialized at last in an old millinery stock on lower Broadway.

The young woman was on hand promptly. The match was a perfect one. "What is the price?" she demanded in a business like way. "Forty-nine cents a yard," replied the young man, with the air of one who expected to be rewarded with a seraphic smile and a whole torrent of thanks. "Well, then, I guess you may give me an eighth and a sixteenth of a yard, and I'd like it on the bias, please."

That salesman has never smiled again. He is not a philosopher. He should have found some compensation in the fact that she paid spot cash. She might have ordered it sent home C. O. D., after the manner of some girls.—New York News.

Imagination.

Imagination is a fine gift, but it wants managing. It runs well in harness with a good stout bridle of common sense. Without this bridle, however, it is likely to lead its master a pretty dance. Hey presto! at the merest prompting off it goes, clean out of the realm of earth and experience, right into the middle of space, with the crosslights of unnumbered spheres confusedly upon it, and strange breezes fanning its hot impulsive exterior.

It is a ticklish piece of work to get it back to earth; and it is so exhausted by the madcap scamper out of the ordinary bounds that its luckless master is for a time as prostrate as if he had been flogged with positive misfortunes. Under the false enthusiasm of an hour ago he would have done all things—or at least attempted them—so bracing was its influence upon his mind; but when this same fancy is temporarily laid by the heels he is useless.—All the Year Round.

A Big Painting.

As some curiosity is expressed as to the quantity of paints and oils used in the construction of the Forth bridge, the officials of the company requested Messrs. Craig & Rose, of London and Glasgow, who held the contract throughout, to make up a statement of the amount actually supplied, and these were found to be as follows: Machinery and illuminating oils, 980,072 gallons; paint oils, 35,527 gallons; paint, 250 tons. It is computed that the quantity of oil used would have been sufficient to float one of her Majesty's first class cruisers and sufficient paint to cover 1,100 acres, or nearly two square miles of surface.—Pall Mall Budget.

Had Been Holding Hands.

"John," said Mrs. Wings at the breakfast table lately, "you've been studying palmistry lately, haven't you?"

Wings thought something was up and evaded the question by another. "What makes you think so?" he asked.

"Oh, last night you kept asking in your sleep, 'What kind of a hand have you got?'"—St. Joseph News.

"August Flower"

Mrs. Sarah M. Black of Seneca, Mo., during the past two years has been affected with Neuralgia of the Head, Stomach and Womb, and writes: "My food did not seem to strengthen me at all and my appetite was very variable. My face was yellow, my head dull, and I had such pains in my left side. In the morning when I got up I would have a flow of mucus in the mouth, and a bad, bitter taste. Sometimes my breath became short, and I had such queer, tumbling, palpitating sensations around the heart. I ached all day under the shoulder blades, in the left side, and down the back of my limbs. It seemed to be worse in the wet, cold weather of Winter and Spring; and whenever the spells came on, my feet and hands would turn cold, and I could get no sleep at all. I tried everywhere, and got no relief before using August Flower Then the change came. It has done me a wonderful deal of good during the time I have taken it and is working a complete cure."
